RANDOM ASSIGNMENT & RARITY TABLES

3028-3057

INTRODUCTION

The Random Assignment Tables (RATs) beginning on page 7 can be used to generate random mech and vehicle assignments for the following eras:

Late Star League (2750)
Late Third Succession War (3028)
War of 3039
Clan Invasion (3050)
Operation Guerrero (3057)

The assignment tables use three ten-sided dice (aka D1000) to generate a result from 1 to 1000. Designate the first die as the “100” digit, the next as the “10” digit, and the last as the single digit before rolling the dice. For example, if the first die comes up a “0”, the second a “0”, and the third a “9”, then your result is 9 (009). A result of “000” is 1000.

Units are ranked in the tables in ascending order using Battle Value 2.0 (and the most recent errata): for example, a low roll gets you a low-BV model. As such, rolling high won't necessarily get you the heaviest machine, but it should get you a better one.

Salvage

If a “Salvage” entry is rolled, you immediately switch to the random deployment table of the faction indicated and re-roll, in the same weight class and applying the same modifiers (if any). Use the same era as well, unless the salvage table specifies otherwise. For example, rolling 004 for 3028 Liao Medium Mechs gives a result of “Salvage: Davion”. You would then reroll on the 3028 Davion Medium Mechs table, apply any equipment rating modifiers (see below), and take whatever machine results. It's possible that you roll salvage several times for a single machine, in which case it has one hell of a story to tell.

Second-Line **

While good-quality units will generally roll up good-quality machines, even in the mech-strapped Mad Max-era of 3028 there were certain models delegated almost entirely to second-line positions. For example, the Capellans consistently consigned their Blackjacks to militia units. “” denotes these sorts of machines, those that should rarely be in the ranks of A-rated units, and may be uncommon in even B-rated units. If such a machine is rolled for an A-rated unit you may wish to reroll. Bear in mind though that the hereditary Battlemech philosophy—the passing down of increasingly rare mechs from one generation of a family to the next—does result in elite pilots equipped with colossally worthless machines. In addition, poorer and newly born nations are often not in a position to be picky. As vehicles are generally thought of as an inherently second-line force to begin with (and because there are fewer to play with), there are no special second-line indicators for them—Bad Reputation Quirks and unit equipment rating modifiers will have to suffice.

Equipment Rating Modifiers

As described in the Field Manual series, each unit has a letter code representing its equipment rating: how favoured the unit is in terms of machine assignments, as well as its access to supplies and spare parts. "A" is normally the highest rating (elite units) and "F" is the worst (backwater militias, political unreliaables).

- When rolling on the 3028, 3039, and 3050 mech assignment tables (except 3050 Steiner; see below), "A" units add 100 to their rolls. "B" units add 50 to their rolls, while "D" units subtract 50. "F" units subtract 100 from their rolls.
- When rolling on the 3057 tables (and the 3050 Steiner tables), apply the following modifiers instead: B (-50), C (+50), F (-100). Lastly, F-rated units must re-roll any unit marked with a ^L (this signifies a machine with Lostech, which was highly unlikely to have trickled down to such low-rated units this early in the technological recovery, regardless of the BV of the machine in question).

In both cases, do not apply a unit rating modifier to the roll if by doing so it would create a result under 0 or over 1000 (e.g. if you roll 900 for an A-rated unit in 3028, add the usual 100; if you roll 901 for that same unit, add nothing).

Notes on Availability

If a machine is not listed with a faction it's not to say that that machine cannot be found there at all, but rather that there is no significant amount and no native supply. Belonging to this category are one-offs and extremely rare experimental variants (Victor -95), as well as machines acquired solely due to Succession Wars salvage (Capellan Sturmfeurs). In the chaos of the Succession Wars it's perfectly feasible to see at least one of any given machine in the ranks of any faction: these tables merely try to depict typical native deployments while attempting to maintain a sense of uniqueness for each faction.

Finally, specialist units with known oddball compositions can throw off attempts at random generation, and so such units will be ignored with regards to overall mech amounts. For example, Cochrane's Goliaths (a battalion entirely made up of otherwise extremely rare Goliaths) likely contained more Goliaths than did the rest of the CCAF combined. Any attempt to take this unit into account while assigning a percentage chance to roll up a Goliath in the Liao ranks would either assign too many Goliaths to every individual CCAF unit, or not enough to the CCAF as a whole, failing either way.

The Mercenary / Periphery General list is for any old generic force of that type. However, if you're rolling up such a unit, and it is tied specifically to one area, it may be more accurate to use the House/Periphery state list closest in proximity to the unit in question. For example, a highly localized band of pirate mechs might be better off using the Taurian Concordat table, while a mercenary unit so static as to be essentially a House unit, like McCarron's Armoured Cavalry, might be better off using the lists of the House they have been serving for so long.

See the Field Manual series of books for many more force generation tables, fine-tuned for specific eras.

Faction Lists

The Faction Lists beginning on page 76 contain every mech that appears on the RATs, organized alphabetically, with Av ratings for each unit, so that you can tell at a glance which faction has access to which units.

INNER SPHERE GENERAL INFORMATION

3028

With regards to weight distributions, there are some regional variations. As far as we know, House Liao's CCAF and House Davion's AFFS generally obey the average distribution ratios. However, House Kurita's DCMS places a great deal of emphasis on operational mobility and as such favours the use of light mechs, while believing that medium mechs represent a useless compromise. House Steiner's LCAF has reached the opposite conclusion: thinking the general answer to any problem is to throw more weight at it, the Lyrans are perhaps the only force that employs the Charger as a scout mech with a straight face. Lastly, in the pre-Clan era House Marik's FWLM (as well as its various provincial forces) strayed from the standard ratios, but due to supply shortages rather than a difference in doctrine; the Free Worlds League was chronically short of assault mechs, and in an attempt to compensate increased production of heavy mechs as much as possible.

REGIONAL WEIGHT DISTRIBUTION: 3028

Military (House)	Light	Medium	Heavy	Assault
Average 3025 distribution	30	40	20	10
Capellan Confederation Armed Forces (Liao)	30	40	20	10
Draconis Combine Mustered Soldiery (Kurita)	40	20	30	10
Armed Forces of the Federated Suns (Davion)	30	40	20	10
Free Worlds League Military (Marik)	30	40	22.5	7.5
Lyran Commonwealth Armed Forces (Steiner)	20	30	35	15

The average distribution percentages for 3028 are canon (albeit very old—1987), but the varying regional distribution percentages are unofficial conjecture. However, I based any attempt to make the assignment tables reflect canon mech amounts (e.g. “there are less than 200 of these mechs left in service amongst the Great Houses”) on these figures.

Information in the Field Manual series of products gives us enough information to construct a series of guesses as to what each House would prefer to work with (as opposed to what they were forced to work with in the Third War-era of scarcity). We are told that Kurita's heavy losses of light mechs, combined with the ability of new technologies to create faster heavy mechs, meant that they moved away from their most extreme reliance on lights. However, they still dislike mediums. The AFFS is overall a slightly lighter force, but we aren't given anything in the way of details to determine what that means. Lastly, although this isn't specifically stated, I assume that Marik's new status as the armaments workshop of the Inner Sphere means they are able to redress their traditional skewing towards heavies and away from assaults (always a matter of necessity for them due to manufacturing shortfalls, rather than preference). My non-canon estimates I used to create the 3057 tables are as follows.

REGIONAL WEIGHT DISTRIBUTION: 3057

Military (House)	Light	Medium	Heavy	Assault
Average 3025 distribution	30	40	20	10
Capellan Confederation Armed Forces (Liao)	30	45	20	5
Draconis Combine Mustered Soldiery (Kurita)	35	20	35	10
Armed Forces of the Federated Suns (Davion)	30	42.5	17.5	10
Free Worlds League Military (Marik)	30	40	20	10
Lyran Commonwealth Armed Forces (Steiner)	20	30	35	15

NUMBER OF 'MECH REGIMENTS PER ERA

Military (House)	Number of House 'Mech Regiments
	3028	3039	3050	3054	Interim ^F	3067	3079	3085	3145
Capellan Confederation Armed Forces (Liao)	40.66	11.66 ^E	11.66	11.66	44 (3063)	42	20.33	29.66	51.33
Draconis Combine Mustered Soldiery (Kurita)	66	94 (19 A*)	98.33	60	76 (3059)	62	23	25	39
Armed Forces of the Federated Suns (Davion)	78	87.33	93.33 [†]		86.66 (3062)	66.66	23.66	32.66	31
Free Worlds League Military (Marik)	56	55	55	55	73.66 (3059)	66	28.33	NA [‡]	24.33 + 6 Clusters
Lyrans Commonwealth Armed Forces (Steiner)	52.66	67.33	93 [†]		77.66 (3062)	73	19.33	33.33	33.33

Totals are not the number of units (which is deceptive when they are under or overstrength), but the number of regiments worth of 'Mechs (as in, all 'Mech battalions added up and divided by three, regardless of how they are organized), rounded to the nearest battalion. Only House units are included; mercenaries are left out of these totals, even those which might as well be considered House line units (like McCarron's Armored Cavalry). Infantry and armor are not included, even if integral to the unit (e.g. Warrior Houses, RCTs).

^E Estimate: no canon data exists. However, as the CCAF had this total at the start of the Magistracy-Andurien Invasion and in 20 Year Update, it's likely a safe estimate.

^F These totals are taken from the Field Manual series of books, each of which is placed at a different in-universe date. The Capellan growth figures are almost entirely the result of the absorption of mercenaries and St. Ives units into the CCAF proper in the period 3060-3063, rather than an explosion of production (only 4 regiments were entirely new). However, some of the absorbed units joined the CCAF at a much weaker state and were fleshed out in CCAF service to their 3063 sizes (e.g. the 4th Tau Ceti, which was battalion strength in 3054 but a regiment by 3063).

[†] The figures here are different than in 20 Year Update because mercenaries and St. Ives units were removed from the totals entirely, while pre-unification Lyrans and Davion units were always counted as belonging to their original Houses, regardless of their garrison location within the Federated Commonwealth.

[‡] The FWL is fractured in this period into its various component substates.

THE STAR LEAGUE 2750

Information on Star League mech allocation is extremely spotty, scattered, and subject to frequent retcons and clarifications, but fortunately the MUL helps a lot by providing canon deployment dates for all Star League-era machines (insert further shameless team promotion here). Still, as with many other eras, availability ratings are often so much guesswork: I'd welcome any corrections or clarifications drawn from the source material that I missed.

As the Star League spans such a large period of time there's room for numerous tables, depending on which point in time you choose to focus on. I've chosen 2750, the same date of the classic Technical Readout that introduced us to Star League equipment in the first place, and ten years before Richard Cameron's murder. There are two different types of Star League tables—Regular Army and Royal. Regular Army is for your typical Star League force. Royal is for those Terran Hegemony-staffed units equipped with the latest and greatest the Star League had to offer (see TR 3075 pp. 168-169 for more info).

Historical: Operation Klondike tells us that the Star League finished a major overhaul to remove many of their centuries-old designs from service just prior to Kerenky's Periphery campaigns. I've done what I can to show this, but the medium tables in particular really suffer from a lack of advanced designs, forcing me to stick with what would become Succession War staples. Note that several of the mechs, though listed as available for the date in question, were fielded in an extremely limited fashion (either by numbers or by deployment) and so have been left out. Lastly, several Star League mechs did not appear until after the 2750 date (such as many of the Operation Klondike machines).

The proportion of Royal to Regular mech units in 2750 was about 1 in 6.

INNER SPHERE MECHS 3028

The following tables show the typical distribution of experience amongst regiments in service with the Successor Lords in 3028:

REGIMENT EXPERIENCE DISTRIBUTION

		Experience Level Breakdown Within Regiment
Regiment Class	% of Regiments	Green	Regular	Veteran	Elite
Light	30	45	25	20	10
Medium	60	30	30	20	20
Heavy & Assault	10	5	20	35	40

MECHWARRIOR EXPERIENCE DISTRIBUTION

Level	% of Mechwarriors
Green	25
Regular	40
Veteran	25
Elite	10

For example, 60% of all regiments belong to the Medium weight class. Of those Medium regiments, 30% can be classified as Green, 30% as Regular, 20% as Veteran, and 20% as Elite. If you're just examining individual Mechwarriors, 25% of all Inner Sphere Mechwarriors are Veterans. These two tables are from BattleForce, 1st edition.

These tables can serve, broadly, as a force generator for the period 2975-3028, but the further back you go, the more distortions are introduced. The biggest ones are the presence of the Merlin, Wolfhound, Hornet, Raven, and Cataphract mechs: these should be re-rolled prior to their introduction dates. Other items are smaller, to the point that most are not going to need to worry about them (the Lyrans should probably have slightly more Sentinels, Orions, and Trebuchets, for example).

INNER SPHERE MECHS 3039

By 3039 the Inner Sphere had changed significantly:

Battle Casualties: the 4th Succession War (3028-3030) inflicted massive and widespread casualties to every House except Marik, which is made up for by the heavy losses incurred by the League in the various Andurien Wars of 3030 to 3035. In addition, the Ronin War of 3034 and its political fallout caused substantial Kuritan mech losses through battle or defection to the newly-formed Free Rasalhague Republic. That having been said, we know nothing about specific models being hit harder than others, with the exception of TR3039 mentions of Liao Thunderbolt and BattleMaster losses and the known extinction of the Exterminator in the 4th War. As such I've assumed that losses were applied effectively even across the board and so overall mech ratios (Availability numbers) stayed the same. Salvage has been increased and the ratios altered for most factions however.

Conquests: the 4th Succession War gave, and the 4th Succession War took away. The Capellan Confederation lost several of their best factories, either to the Federated Suns or to their breakaway province, the St. Ives Compact. The Federated Suns also lost in that war, their facilities on Marduk captured by the Combine. Lastly, the Kuritans lost several factories to the breakaway Free Rasalhague Republic. Each of these facilities began producing their usual designs for their new masters. However, as they were old, occasionally damaged in the fighting, and working with debased Succession Wars technology, their output compared to the number of mechs already in service was small. Thus, the tables do not change too much due to new production, except where relatively new designs are concerned (e.g. Hornet, Wolfhound, Raven, Merlin).

New Nations: the St. Ives Compact and the Free Rasalhague Republic were created in this period.

Tech Transfers: In 3033 Theodore Kurita signed an agreement with ComStar that would provide them with many regiments of new mechs. Several of these designs were previously quite rare (the Crab), or had been extinct altogether (the Thorn). In addition, a cemented alliance and an enlarged Terran Corridor facilitated mass transfers of new machines from one half of the newly-formed Federated Commonwealth to another, meaning that designs such as the Enforcer, Commando, and Zeus appear where they had never been seen before.

Three new factions appear at this time: St. Ives Compact, Free Rasalhague Republic, and Draconis Combine A*. The Kurita A* table is only for mechs, and represents the best of the best, those units with access to the pick of the Star League treasure chest. There are no modifiers applied when rolling on it, though you may reroll the lowest result per lance if you wish (the result of the second roll must be kept). Note that the frequent retcons applied since Historical: War of 3039 was released have led me to use that book as a reference for A* unit contents only when it does not contradict a later source.

Though proto-Star League technologies make their first appearances in this time period, for the most part they are extremely rare and expensive prototypes, not yet ready for production (see the Recovered Prototype items in Interstellar Operations). Assigned only to super-elite units or specialist testing cadres, it is suggested that such technologies be deliberately employed, rather than randomly assigned. The sole exception are the Star League-era machines provided in very limited numbers to the DCMS by ComStar, which are found in the Kuritan A* assignment table and are not prototypes.

CLAN MECHS 3050

The 3050 tables include all front-line Clan machines appearing up to and including the battles of Luthien and Tukayyid (3052). Realistically there should be separate Smoke Jaguar and Nova Cat tables for the initial invasion, Luthien, and Tukayyid too, as well as two separate Steel Viper tables. However, that requires far more space than it's worth (and it seems unlikely that the mechs of TR3058, fluffed as appearing for the first time at Luthien or Tukayyid, are also very common, as the Smoke Jaguar's Hankyu deployment describes—not appearing in the first wave or even at Luthien, until Tukayyid, where it's suddenly 1-in-5 of that Clan's light mechs). So, I've decided to treat as first-wave mechs anything that was in production before the Clan Invasion AND appeared through to Tukayyid in significant numbers. This rules out the Grendel, Pouncer etc, which will appear later.

In theory, the strength of the Omnimech, and the founding concept behind it, is versatility: the power to mix and match weapon loadouts as the situation demands. Any one pilot could hypothetically equip their Omnimech however they wish. However, if you desire to model a Clan's forces as you would likely encounter them, Omnimech variants must be taken into account, as each Clan has very distinct preferences. TR3050 Upgrade was the primary source for the Av rating decisions made. I've used the original TR3050, as well as the Tukayyid scenario pack and the Clan sourcebooks, to fill in a few blanks when their information did not conflict with 3050U. Tukayyid in particular was heavily relied on, primarily in regards to the availability of alternate configurations on a per-Clan basis.

As befitting the known fighting tactics of the Clans in this era, when lacking any canon info I've given priority to configurations heavy on ammunition over those emphasizing energy weapons. This known preference caused me to ignore much of the Tukayyid sourcebook's information on the Wolf Clan deployment; we know that Ulric for that campaign reconfiguring his Clan's mechs from their typical loadouts in order to be less reliant on ammunition, producing an energy-heavy deployment that does not reflect the usual Wolf preferences of the initial invasion. For the First through Fifth Waves Wolf seems to have used their normal loadouts, but dealt with the problem of supply through exceptionally large supply caches and their unique Logistical Augmentation Program (LAP). As there's no evidence that the Wolf focus on energy weapons was anything more than a strategic move made for the Tukayyid campaign alone, I suggest using energy-heavy loadouts just for Tukayyid and then returning to the regular Wolf charts for the post-truce raids that follow.

Lacking both large enough dedicated caches and an elaborate salvage and scavenge network, the Ghost Bears dealt with their supply troubles by issuing orders in January 3052 to reconfigure their mechs to less ammo-reliant configurations. On Tukayyid they would be second only to the Wolves in number of energy-heavy configurations employed. As such, use the initial Ghost Bear charts for battles up to and including Alshain; the remaining battles of the Fifth Wave (Tinaca through Rubigen, as well as Tukayyid itself) use the second set of charts.

On Clan tables, "Isorla" results replace the normal Salvage entries. Isorla (either Isorla: Major Rival, or Isorla: Other Clan) generally works the same as Salvage: if you roll one, switch to the random front-line deployment table of an appropriate Clan and roll on that instead. However, if I haven't worked up tables for an appropriate Clan, then you'll have to use an official table from a published source.

I've decided to cover just front-line Clan units at this time; a future release will provide charts for second-line units.

Note: for space considerations, on these tables the Prime configuration is the one unmarked (e.g. Stooping Hawk Prime will be listed as "Stooping Hawk").

INNER SPHERE MECHS 3050

The Steiner military in this period undergoes phenomenal growth, going from 67 to 93 regiments, an increase of 26 regiments (28%). It's with Steiner that you see the first older machines begin to disappear off the tables, due to being flooded out by new construction. The size of the Steiner increase also necessitated, I feel, that faction being split into two tables for 3050: A/B-rated, and C/D/F-rated (as happens to everyone in 3057).

There is also the matter of new technology. The original Technical Readout 3050 (non-Upgraded) detailed the first Inner Sphere mechs in the modern era built using Star League technologies. The book has an in-universe publishing date of February 3052, which would make most of its machines (described as just entering service at that time) not available during the Clan Invasion. However, it was realized that TR3050 describes Inner Sphere mechs about to roll off the assembly lines of planets that, assuming the book's 3052 date was correct, had already been captured by Clan forces months or years earlier. The intro to that book does state that it was originally compiled by ComStar staffers in 3050, but was supposedly held back and revised for later so that it wouldn't already be obsolete upon release. It's obvious that the introduction was added after the rest of the book had already been written, and that the book's contents do not reflect this supposed revision.

As a result, we've decided to officially errata the original TR3050 introduction by striking it altogether: the book's mech production details are now set in 3050, rather than 3052. In addition, as the MUL team has been required to create canon deployment dates for every unit in the Battletech universe, I can now state with near-absolute certainty what would be available at the dawn of the Clan Invasion. As always, the Av numbers and table percentages I come up with are pure bits of unofficial guesswork, with no canon standing whatsoever.

It's important to note that, in 3050, Star League technology would still be trickling onto the scene: the simple fact of the matter is that, excepting the most elite units, the Inner Sphere fought the Clan Invasion using largely the same machines it possessed in 3039 (which of course is much of the reason why they did so badly). Even in these elite units, not all the machines of TR3050 are available: some are described as still on the drawing board, up to three years away from even starting production. The real difference in A-rated units at this time would be in the quality of their machines (that is, their overall age), not their type, as well as the unit's access to parts and skilled techs and the high levels of experience possessed by its pilots.

There is no official list of the units that were fielding Star League recovered technology in 3050, but generally any Elite unit with a Loyalty rating of Reliable or Fanatical, or any Veteran unit with a Loyalty rating of Fanatical, would likely qualify. An unofficial, potential list of candidates for A-rated status is as follows:

INNER SPHERE MECHS 3057

Between 3050 and 3057 we see surprisingly heavy changes in mech distribution. There are two reasons for this. First and foremost is the effect of the Clan Invasion, which decimates the forces of Steiner and Kurita. This wipes out large numbers of oldtech machines. The second is the general technological renaissance sparked by the recovery of the Helm Memory Core, which at last allows mass manufacturing of Mechs both new and old.

By 3057, the CCAF had continued its slow and painful rebuild from its 4th War-shellacking, reaching about 15 line regiments (again, meaning non-mercenary). This means that about 25% of the CCAF was new-built compared to its post-4th War nadir, and so I've dropped the numbers of most "heritage" machines (Star League leftovers not replaceable by Marik production) by 25% to match this growth. I made an occasional exception for certain iconic Capellan units, like the Catapult.

Another 10 Capellan regiments were technically mercs, but many were of such longstanding service that they would eventually become full line regiments, so this can be deceiving. Outside this mercenary core, another 20 regiments are available to the CCAF through an extensive series of unit and cash loans from the Free Worlds League in preparation for that years' Operation Guerrero. While the 10 "core" mercenary units are justified in using either the Capellan or the mercenary tables, the other 20 are unabashedly mercenaries and should use the mercenary tables exclusively.

The Steiner and Kuritan militaries are harder to deal with. Part of the problem is that we have no firm force totals for the exact year of 3057, since the Field Manual series gives staggered force overviews from 3059 into the early 3060s, depending on the faction covered. The other issue is that the writers of this time remembered to detail those regiments destroyed in the Clan Invasion, but often failed to account for new manufacturing. For example, the DCMS had 98 regiments in 3050 and 76 regiments in 3059, as stated in Field Manual DCMS: a difference of 22 regiments. By comparing 20 Year Update with Field Manual DCMS, we get 36 regiments that were either destroyed in the Invasion or disbanded in the five-year period afterward. This gives 14 new-built regiments for the DCMS to get to our 3059 total of 76 regiments; as we know that the Combine built 8 regiments of new omnimechs alone in this time (before even taking into account traditionally high-volume manufacture of non-omnis, like the Dragon), this is entirely plausible.

Thanks to the Field Manuals we know that upgrade percentages are very high very early on, reaching 60 and 70 percent by the early 3060s. Between that, the extreme manufacturing rates mentioned in Field Manual DCMS, and the fact that we have the tables now split between A/B units and C/D/F units, I've not been shy about rolling out newtech machines in larger numbers on these tables, especially the A/B ones. At the same time, the fact that Succession War-era machines survive into the 3085 and even 3145 Field Manual RATs means that they're not going anywhere, even in units that are the most favoured and the best of the best.

You may notice the seeming paradox that certain rare and old (and often not especially good) machines are now found only on the A/B-rated tables. This is because they were small enough in number that placing them at Av 1 in both the A/B and C/D/F tables would have made them statistically too numerous. As such, they have been confined to the A/B tables only, since these regiments are a small portion of the overall faction's force.

FACTION LISTS INTRODUCTION

A few notes regarding the following:

- Faction tables are laid out one per faction, and contain only the machines that are available on that faction's random assignment tables.
- On Availability ("Av" for short): I rated each unit's Availability on a ten-point scale. The scale is only meant to represent how often that particular machine appears within both its weight class and the force(s) it serves with. It is not meant to give an accurate picture of exact numbers of the machine currently in service. Besides the fact that hard production numbers are almost nonexistent, different weight classes have different deployment ratios. For example, assault mechs are usually a mere 10% of a mech force, while mediums are the most common (~40%). Similarly, the overall size of a force matters: the House Liao's Champions increase from Av 4 in 3028 to Av 7 in 3039. They did not gain more in that time: it's just that the amount they have left in 3039, after losing so many regiments in the 4th War, is a much greater percentage of their overall heavy mech complement.

Av 10 machines are those where at least one example should be found in every appropriate lance or star (Wasp, Zeus, Hermes II), while Av 1 is incredibly rare (a handful of examples in the entire faction, like the original variants of the Clint and Cicada). Availability is just meant to be just a basic guideline—don't bother trying to derive hard numbers from it or embrace it as in any way canon, but instead use it as a comparative guide. As a general guide (because having very many or very few types of units in a single weight category distorts those numbers), each Av value roughly translates into the following frequency for that weight category:

1	Very Rare	1 in 200
2	Very Rare	1 per regiment
3	Rare	1 per two battalions
4	Rare	1 per battalion
5	Uncommon	1 in 28
6	Uncommon	1 in 20
7	Common	1 per company
8	Common	1 per binary
9	Very Common	1 per demi-company
10	Very Common	1 per lance

With regards to the distortion mentioned above, the reason this is only a general guide is because having few models in a weight class makes a given rating be worth more than normal, while having a lot of models in a weight class produces the opposite result. For example, giving 3028 Steiner an Av of 7 for their Atlases doesn't mean they're swimming in AS7-Ds compared to 3028 Kurita (whose Atlases are Av 4). This is because the Kuritans have very few assault models at that time (making Av 4 worth a lot more on their list than someone else's Av 4), while Steiner has the opposite problem (tons of assault models, making Av 7 worth a lot less). The result is that Steiner does have more, but not three times as many, as the difference between Av 4 and Av 7 normally indicates. Basically, the exact number of machines an Av rating represents changes for each faction, era, and unit quality division.

- If a machine is very rare (Av 1 or 2) in a faction, that faction will often not have any variants of it listed unless a Technical Readout specifically states that one is in service with that faction. Again, this is not to say examples don't exist there, but that the numbers are so small as to be not worth including.
- In the Kuritan 3039 column you'll come across an A*-rated column. The A* rating is only used for Kurita, and only for the 3039 era.
